Lola's Jane Carter Solution Looks

In a few of my recent posts, I talked about styling products from the Jane Carter Solution line. I want to say that I first heard of them on the iNternets some years ago, but I can say with certainty that both Target and Whole Foods sell it now (and so does the Adventist store out in Maryland, but don't ask me how to get there cuz I don't know, lol). If I had been thinking clearly at the time of those postings, I would have showed you readers some pictures of my styles. But I wasn't, so I'm showing you guys now! Read on.

Ive used the Jane Carter Solution on many occasions. One of the first was for my birthday. I did a twist out: I sprayed on the Revitalizing Leave-In Conditioner, and then braided my hair into six cornrows with the Wrap & Roll setting lotion. After letting them air dry for @20 hours, I unbraided my hair using the Nourish & Shine. This is what the results looked like:

This pic was taken during dinner.

This shot was taken after I got back to my apartment. Yes, my makeup looks a wee bit askew. Don't judge me!

I loved the way my hair felt, but, as you can see, my hair didn't have a lot of definition, and didn't last that long, but that's the way my hair is, especially in the summertime.

Since it is the summertime, I am the queen of the wash-and-go! The Jane Carter Solution product I use when doing this is Condition & Sculpt. I usually wash and condition my hair, lightly towel-dry it, spray on the leave-in conditioner, and then apply the Condition & Sculpt. I apply it little by little, in small sections, starting with the nape. I like to sit around for a wee bit in my apartment, giving the hair a wee bit of time to dry before getting dressed. The results are well-defined, shiny curls that last (somewhat) for a few days.

The following are pictures I took roughly one hour after applying the Condition & Sculpt. Yes, this is the bathroom of Georgia Brown's restaurant, lol.

Because my hair is a variety of textures (and lengths) I like to wear a headband.

Wild and wavy!

To moisturize and add shine in the days afterwards, I use the Nourish & Shine. I love it!

So there you have it folks, just two of the looks I achieved using products from the Jane Carter Solution! So, what do you readers think? Have any of you tried this product line? What were your results??
